International Perspectives on Peace Education

There are many different approaches to peace education, but they all share common goals:

- To promote a culture of peace and non-violence.

- To develop the knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary for peaceful living.
- To empower individuals and communities to work for peace.

Peace education can be delivered through a variety of methods, including formal schooling, community-based programs, and media campaigns.

Some of the most well-known international perspectives on peace education include:

- UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization): UNESCO has been a leader in promoting peace education since its inception in 1945. It has developed a number of resources and programs on peace education, including the Education for Peace in a Global Perspective program.
- The Hague Appeal for Peace: The Hague Appeal for Peace is a global movement of educators and activists who are working to promote peace education. The Hague Appeal has developed a number of resources on peace education, including the Peace Education Kit.
- The International Institute for Peace Education: The International Institute for Peace Education (IIPE) is a non-profit organization that works to promote peace education worldwide. IIPE offers a variety of resources and programs on peace education, including the Peace Education Certificate Program.

Monisha Bajaj's Work in Peace Education

Monisha Bajaj is a renowned peace education advocate who has worked tirelessly to promote peace education in India and around the world.

Bajaj is the founder and executive director of the Global Peace Foundation India, a non-profit organization that works to promote peace education, interfaith dialogue, and leadership development. She is also a member of the UNESCO Mahatma Gandhi Institute for Education for Peace and Sustainable Development.

Bajaj's work in peace education has been recognized by numerous awards and honors, including the UNESCO Gandhi-King Award for Non-Violence in 2015.

One of Bajaj's most notable contributions to peace education is the development of the Peace Curriculum. The Peace Curriculum is a comprehensive peace education program that has been used in schools and communities around the world.

The Peace Curriculum is based on the principles of non-violence, compassion, and understanding. It teaches students about the root causes of conflict and provides them with the skills they need to resolve conflict peacefully.

Bajaj's work in peace education is making a real difference in the world. She is helping to create a more peaceful future for all.

Peace education is an essential tool for building a more peaceful world. By teaching students and individuals the values and skills they need to live peacefully, we can help to create a more just and equitable society.

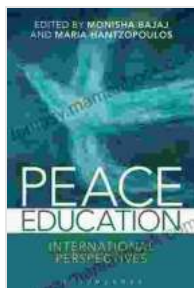

The work of Monisha Bajaj is a shining example of the power of peace education. She is an inspiration to all who are working to make the world a more peaceful place.
